ZELLIGE

Zellige tiles have been adorning the walls of palaces, medersas, mosques and Medina fountains for centuries.

This enameled clay tile still is handmade by experienced artisans following ancestral techniques. It is fired and then delicately hand cut into diverse shapes (square, octagon, star, cross). Infinite designs can be created with Zellige tiles.

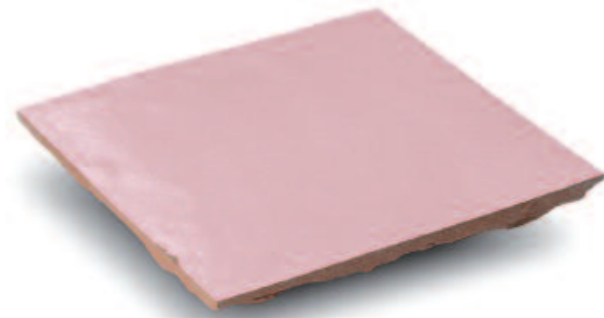

Influenced by arts from the Byzantine, Arab, Persian and Roman Empires, Zellige can be used in a contemporary interior while keeping its traditional aspect. ■

BEJMAT

The Bejmat is a little Moroccan biscuit, originating from the Moroccan town of Fès, it comes from the curing of a brioche called Qrachel that has flavours of orange blossom and anis.

Once the Qrachel has become hard, it is cut in little slices and then goes through the oven again to obtain little rectangular crispy biscuits: the bejmat.

The resemblance of the clay tile with this biscuit as well as the similitude of their fabrication processes explain why they are both called Bejmat. ■
